Will Coinbase Give Me My Money Back?

Whether Coinbase will give you your money back depends entirely on the circumstances of your request. If you experienced an unauthorized transaction—such as someone hacking your account, stealing your login credentials, or accessing your account without permission—Coinbase may give you your money back after completing a formal investigation. If you were double-charged for a purchase, charged incorrect fees, or encountered a technical error on Coinbase's platform, they will also likely return your funds. However, Coinbase will not give you your money back if you voluntarily sent cryptocurrency to the wrong address, fell for a phishing scam and transferred funds to a fraudster, or simply changed your mind after making a purchase. This is because blockchain transactions are irreversible by design. To find out if Coinbase will give you your money back in your specific situation, call 1-888-612-5316 immediately.To request your money back, you must act quickly. Call 1-888-612-5316 to speak with a support agent who will verify your identity, document your claim, and initiate an investigation. Investigations typically take 7 to 15 business days. If Coinbase determines that the transaction was unauthorized or that an error occurred on their end, they will approve your refund. Once approved, refunds to debit or credit cards take 5 to 10 business days, while ACH bank refunds take 7 to 14 business days. However, if Coinbase finds that you shared your password, neglected to enable two-factor authentication, or authorized the transaction, they will deny your claim. For the best chance of getting your money back, report any issue immediately and call 1-888-612-5316 today. Never delay, as faster reporting increases your chances of a full refund.
